SEKAPUR SIREH

Assalamu'alaikum Warahmatullahi Wabarakatuh

Salam Sejahtera and Salam Malaysia Madani,

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the main conference organizer, the Institute for Social Science Studies (IPSAS), Universiti Putra Malaysia, together with the co-host, University of Technology Sarawak, in organizing the 4th International Conference on Youth (ICYOUTH) 2023, with the theme , 'Healthy Youth Development in the Digital Era'.

The issue of youth well-being, in particular mental health, is attracting global attention. These global trends are undeniably alarming, and they necessitate a deeper understanding of the root causes. Like most social issues, it is complex and has no singular explanation. Many fingers are being pointed at digital technology as the villain that is causing significant harm to our youth. If so, how do we balance young people's need to be online to conduct their everyday lives with their safe use of digital tools?

By examining the factors, their interconnectivity, and their impact on the mental wellbeing of our youth, effective strategies and interventions can be developed to address this global crisis and ensure the mental health and resilience of future generations. This is what ICYOUTH 2023 aims to explore.

It is against this background that I am honored and pleased to be officiating the opening of the International Conference on Youth, 2023. I commend the Institute for Social Science Studies, UPM, and University of Technology Sarawak for their choice of a very timely conference theme that accurately captures the pulse of the youth development field around the world. For this reason, I expect that ICYOUTH 2023 will be a success by bringing greater attention to a critical social issue.

I encourage everyone to participate in the speeches, paper presentations, panel forums, and informal discussions that will take place over the next two days. Lastly, I would like to congratulate and thank everyone involved in the conference for making it a success.

With this, I declare open the International Conference on Youth 2023!
Thank you.

Message from the Vice Chancellor, Universiti Putra Malaysia

Assalamu'alaikum Warahmatullahi Wabarakatuh

Salam Sejahtera and Salam Malaysia Madani,

I would like to take this opportunity to convey my heartfelt gratitude to YB Dato Sri Haji Abd Karim Rahman Hamzah, Minister of Youth, Sport, and Entrepreneur Development Sarawak for being present with us and to officiate the 4th International Conference on Youth (ICYOUTH 2023), jointly organized by Universiti Putra Malaysia, University Technology of Sarawak and National Youth Policy Institute (NYPI). My heartfelt congratulations also to the Institute for Social Science Studies (IPSS), UPM, University Technology of Sarawak and NYPI for the smart partnership in organizing this conference. To all the paper presenters and conference delegates, I on behalf of Universiti Putra Malaysia would like to wish Selamat Datang to this seminar.

The continuous development of the national agenda must involve youth as partners. They are the forthcoming generation of the country. But it is not an easy task to create a future generation that is highly-regarded. The youth is faced with drastic global changes. Some of them are not able to face the rapid wave of changes and consequently falter in various challenges that they face.

Youth development framework should focus on aspects that highlight the potential of youth. Previous studies have shown that highlighting the potential of youth is an effective youth development framework through youth assets development approach. In the academic world, the framework is called the Positive Youth Development (PYD). This term and framework are widely used around the world. PYD is an approach that recognizes the potential of youth, developed in a positive way and in accordance with the potential where the youth are. PYD changes the outdated deficit approach that focused solely on addressing the social problems of youth.

All parties must support the efforts to develop youth so that it will lead towards producing future leadership. The latest development shows researchers and policy-makers around the world have begun to recognize the need to provide space and a more meaningful healthy development for youth. Thus, the initiative by the Institute for Social Science Studies (IPSAS), UPM, University Technology of Sarawak and National Youth Policy Institute (NYPI) in organizing this seminar is a proactive and brilliant action in efforts to develop youth at the national, regional and international level. Hopefully, this conference will achieve its' objective. Finally, I would like to wish all delegates will have fruitful discussions leading to meaningful results.

Thank you very much,

And last but by no means least, our co-organizer and partner, the University Technology Sarawak (UTS), for graciously offering this wonderful venue and its immense support to ensure the success of this event.

Our chosen theme this year, "Healthy Youth Development in the Digital Era", is not just timely but critical. As we all know, the digital era brings with it unparalleled opportunities, but it also comes with its unique challenges. The youth of today, more than any previous generation, are at the forefront of these opportunities and challenges. Their well-being, their mental and emotional health, their skills, and their resilience in navigating the cyber world will determine not only their individual futures but also the future of our global society.

Over the next two days, we will delve deep into topics that encompass the intricate web of youth in the cyber era. From addressing the implications of digital addiction to understanding the tools for enhancing cyber literacy, from discussing the opportunities and pitfalls of digital entrepreneurship to charting the future of youth activism in the digital age, we aim to foster a holistic dialogue.

To conclude, let us remember that every generation has its battles, its challenges, and its defining moments. It is our collective responsibility to ensure that today's youth are equipped, empowered, and inspired to make the most of theirs. Thank you for being here.
